Excerpt from The Rise and Fall of the Licensed Physician in Massachusetts, 1781-1860: The President's Address at the Ninth Annual Meeting of the Association of American Physicians in Washington, May 29, 1894 The Society continued to fail in its object to create a proper standard of medical qualifications. The population of the State rapidly increased, and the number of practitioners likewise. There was no sufficient inducement to lead physicians to apply for the approval of the Society and in the first twenty years of its existence only some twenty candidates had received the testimonials in approval of their professional skill.² In the same period Harvard had conferred its medical degree upon thirty candidates.
