Peace Corps Writers. Paperback. Book Condition: New. Paperback. 140 pages. Dimensions: 7.9in. x 5.3in. x 0.6in. Technology first rocked our world when a lightning bolt zapped a bush at the entrance to a cave, and First Man crawled out and stuck his hand into the mystical blaze. Centuries later, we still find technology fascinating, mysterious, distracting, vital and Wow! Shiny!--and it still fries our grasping, hapless human hands, not to mention our grasping, hapless human brains. These short essays are all about that tender point where the finger meets the flame, where the ecstasy and the pain live--and where the sweet, dark humor so often lurks. Most of them simply examine the craziness of everyday life. Some spring from weird travel experiences. Some pick at politics, nuzzle at religion, worry at war. They're set in Starbucks, in my kitchen, in Viet Nam, in India, on a Russian train and a Greyhound bus; in Massachusetts, Indiana, Brooklyn and Times Square; in WalMart and Golden Corral, and at the second inauguration of Barack Obama. All have been published somewhere before. In all the pieces, there is a tie to technology, be it as strong as an anchor cable, or as tenuous as a spiderweb. This gives me a lot of leeway--because what, in this modern world, isn't tied to technology A final disclaimer: you certainly don't have to be tech savvy to enjoy this book. You just have to be a human being with band-aids on your fingers. Which pretty much describes us all. This item ships from multiple locations. Your book may arrive from Roseburg, OR, La Vergne, TN. Paperback.
