Trafford Publishing, Canada, 2009. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .The challenging literary journey taken by Ellery Littleton of writing a poem a day for a year has resulted in a remarkable series of concise poems which bring a penetrating zen-like awareness to the experiences of each day. Through the year, Ellery Littleton writes, I came to see that just below the level of daily awareness the magic realism of poetry flows along like a stream. I found that I could access it by consciously slowing down, opening to myself, meditating, in essence. And I learned in a new way what the abiding concerns and themes of my life are, the elements of my personal myth , as Jung called it. The process of looking for a poem subtly affected the way I would experience the day, and sharpened my perceptions. I would go looking for the memorable moment which could be transformed into a poem. At other times, something would trigger a memory and I would reach far back into my life to find a poem waiting to be transcribed in present time. As well as being a journal, this book is also something of an autobiography; the past is very present throughout. The novelist Janet Rice writes that the interaction between a particular poem becomes a rite of passage from one stage of awareness of self to another, with the poem as the facilitator or guide during the process. I found this observation to be true for me, Ellery Littleton says. The poems led the way; I followed along and did my best to write them down. Riverwalk includes 40 photographs, all but two of which were taken by the author. Designed by Mark Blaney.
