Excerpt from Arbor Day: Rhode Island, May Ninth, Nineteen Hundred and Two Another spring brings us again to our Arbor Day festival. This is peculiarly the children s day because it is so thoroughly linked with life, vigor, and growth. Then, too, by the law of association, all of Nature, - the flowers and shrubs, birds and animals, - all things which speak of living beauty and activity are connected with the topic and the day. Obediently to that thought we have devoted now one year and now another to the flowers, the shrubs, the birds, as well as to the general topic. Ten years have passed since the first programme was prepared. It seems to be a fitting time for the original subject of tree planting to engage our attention. Many, if not most, of those pupils who took part in the exercises of 1892 have left school. Hence there are undoubtedly some who know but little about Arbor Day. It has, therefore, been deemed best to place the emphasis of this day upon the tree, its uses, its part in the economy of our lives, and the place it has secured in our literature. Your attention is called particularly to our own trees, - that is, those which we may call natives. The pamphlet from which this list is taken was compiled by one of the best known teachers of our State, Mr. L.W. Russell, of the Bridgham School, Providence, and will well repay careful study. Upon the title page of this programme will be found a picture of a tree rarely excelled for its beauty. It is a view of a tulip tree to be found growing on...
