Excerpt from Labor s Relation to the World War We protested vigorously to Germany against that system of warfare that destroyed the lives of our people, and Germany agreed to desist. Again we were hopeful that we would be able to get through without being engaged in the conflict. But in January, the very end of it, we were given a brief notice by the German Imperial Government that they would again resume their submarine warfare, again destroy the lives of our people without warning. There was no other course left to us but to defend the lives of these people. Part Of The Problem. I know that amongst our own people the claim was put forth that no man should be permitted to go upon these vessels as a passenger, taking the chance of having his life destroyed and thereby endangering the peace of his own country, and that our country should prohibit passengers from going upon vessels. But that was only a part of the problem. Suppose that we had as a Government, as a people, said to those who desired to travel upon those vessels as passengers, You must not travel upon those vessels, or, if you do, you do so at your own risk. We would not then have solved the problem, because there were the seamen to take into consideration, the sailor upon the bridge, the fireman and the engineer in the hold, the cook and the steward, and the vast numbers of men who daily earned their bread in manning the vessels. Even if we had taken the passengers off, we would then have been placed in the position of having to abandon our overseas...
