Forgotten Books, United States, 2017. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from A City of Dream: Guanajuato It is a full day's ride from Mexico City, and all the way we watched for some sign of the awakening, for we reasoned that if Guanajuato had waked up, some of the nearer places on the line of the railway must have shared in the catastrophe. At Tula, where the winds on a summer day are like so many breaths from heaven, the same women and children brought the same peppery things to eat, and the same little girls hurried to the car windows with brown jugs of pulque. Up through the beautiful valley of San Juan del Rio all was the same; the same people sold the same wares, and the same blind beggars held up the same dirty sombreros. At Queretaro, old, historic, quaint and beautiful the place where Maximilian was put to death the same women tended their garlanded jars of food and coffee, and no awakening appeared. Indeed, all through the valley there were the same dear old sights, even to the primitive way of drawing water for irrigation - a bucket let down on the end of a log swung on a post - and the men who drew the water wore no more clothes than they ever did, their costume being a pair of white linen trousers rolled high above the knees, their rich copper-colored skins showing splendidly against the shining green of the trees above them. Much of the way was lined with exquisite gardens, out of which splashes of color and waves of delicious fragrance floated up to the travelers. Finally we reached Silao, where one must change cars for the little railroad which twists its way...
